WM. WELLS BROWN said that the Slave Power had, from the first, used all its resources to sustain itself and its reputation for respectability. Its policy has been to buy up whatever stood in its way—politicians and ministers especially. He instanced Dr. Nehemiah Adams as an illustration of the way in which the South buys up the ministers.

Mr. Brown thought he knew about as much of slavery as Dr. Adams, and could give quite as accurate a view of the subject. He had been a slave himself for twenty years, and he would undertake to examine some of the Rev. gentleman’s positions and assertions. This work of criticism Mr. Brown did up much to the detriment of his dissected reverence. Had Dr. Adams been present, we think he would have felt himself to be a very insignificant personage before this graduate of the plantation, and we could wish him no greater justice than to have to meet Mr. Brown on the anti-slavery platform. Mr. Brown closed with some interesting remarks on the anti-slavery sentiment of Great Britain, and upon the importance of labouring to strip slavery of its social and religious character.
